

Working with the world's deadliest animal

Dr. Ulla Gordon
Biogents AG

As biologists, our training equips us with a broad skill set enabling us to quickly adapt to changing tasks and new challenges. There is not one particular occupation for a biologist. Although many aspire to a career in research or academia, sometimes the most interesting opportunities lurk just off the beaten path. Flexibility, curiosity, a good network, patience, and persistence are reliable allies on the hunt for that “perfect” job. Ulla Gordon started working for Biogents 2002, a company spin-off from the Institute of Zoology at Regensburg University, with a focus on the development of intelligent & environmentally friendly trapping systems for mosquito control. In her talk she will give an insight into her career path from the director of the contract research program to a HR manager.
